() The left horn of the uterus running obliquely toward the pelvis and downward. In the-figure the tube uterina, uterine or Fallopian tube, is not to be seen; ovary and uterus appear on this account to be connected, which, however, in reality is not the case. The uterine horn, which with that of the opposite side continues into the body of the uterus above the urinary bladder, crosses in an oblique direction (k) The terminal portion of the colon, colon descendens, which is continued directly by the rectum, without the formation of a colon sigmoideum. Below (ventrally from) the colon lie first of all () Loops or coils of the small intestine, which fill the inferior portion of the abdominal cavity completely. Toward the pelvis these are apposed to the apex of (m) The bladder, which in the dog lies almost entirely in the...
