That old, old house near the lane, Still shows the broken window pane, Where an urchin of long ago, Was wont to try his arrow bow. The dismal house is vacant now, For all the folks with ancient brow, Have passed away to other climes, And left the place to modern times. 4. 4. 4. ASLEEP Canst thou tell us, little sleeper, Whiter than the snow, Of the glory that surrounds thee We would know. Tell us of the holy city, With its streets of gold, Where his lambs the shepherd gatherg In the fold. For the gates seem widely open Where thou dwellest now, A. nd we see the pure light shining On thy brow. Fare thee well, dear little sleeper, Hear our last good-night; Thou hast conquered in the battle; We must fight. May we live, that, when the summons Comes for us..
