Fellow Citizens: I am to address you to-day in honor of the dead. I am to speak not only of those brave men who laid down their lives for the Government we possess and the homes we enjoy, but of those men also who, forty years ago, met where and as we now meet, and for a like purpose. I am to speak, as it were, in obedience to the command of the dead, whose will, so manifest and generous, we meet this day to execute. But I am also to speak to an asssemblage of freemen, convened for such solemn services in a period of their national history, when the Government is called upon to undergo what all nations must submit to first or last - struggle and grapple for its very life; and, while so struggling, demonstrate to the world, not only the strength of Democracies, but the ability and will of...
